'It's Cool To Care': Tool to tackle bullying at school

CCM 09-24-2019
item # 5 A - E

The 2019/2020 Teen Huddle volunteers create a circle of love and hand together during their annual beach retreat to prepare for their year of philanthropic giving and supporting families and children living with autism spectrum disorder.

Anxious feelings are normal during times of change, and this month, children will face those feelings when heading back to school. New faces, a different environment and the possibility of bullying are fears for any child when returning to school. However, for children with autism, those worries are multiplied. Students living with autism spectrum disorder are 63 percent more likely to be bullied in public schools than typically developing peers.

Facing that statistic can no longer be ignored. Local non-profit, Hope For Three, has constructed a program to educate and empower students and educators. It's Cool to Care (ICTC) intends to bring bullying to a halt and break down boundaries for children living with autism. Since inception, the ICTC program has successfully presented information to more than 15,000 students and educators throughout the Greater Houston area. ICTC creates heightened awareness and knowledge through its key concepts of patience, empathy, and anti-bullying. The target audience for this program is grades K-12, as well as faculty members. During the presentation, handouts are provided to illustrate and define what autism is, and interactive exercises and videos depict the daily struggles and experiences of those living with autism. Students are given real-life tactics to put to use on how to be a 'good friend' and an advocate for anti-bullying.

Hope For Three, is made up of high school students who completed an ICTC training.

Teen Huddle is an auxiliary group of 20 teen volunteers from 13 different area schools who share a mission, "to increase autism awareness and acceptance among teens."

The bi-monthly programs they host provide families with "Parents Time Out" and "Sibling Sessions," a mentor program for siblings of children with autism. The 2019/2020 Teen Huddle volunteers, which also includes four teens who experienced "Sibling Sessions" were inducted during a beach retreat last month and are eager to begin their philanthropic journey.

"ICTC and Teen Huddle are both Hope For Three programs conducted to ignite a stronger, more knowledgeable community," said Samantha Katchy, Hope For Three Family Assistant Manager. "These relationships not only help cut down the statistics of bullying but also provide a pathway for more inclusive opportunities."

Schools, businesses and organizations can schedule an ICTC presentation by contacting Hope For Three at 281-245-0640 or visit hopeforthree.org/programs.
